

The difference in distance

I am beautiful, I am elegant no?

Yes both those things, but I cant like you just because of that can I?

Yes I guess you can, I think I like you and I haven't a clue why. Beautiful, yes, to me

What do you mean to you?

To me

How about beautiful, y'know, as standard – am I not part of the general consensus?

Perhaps, but I would like to override that and place your beauty in the context of my interests, I want you to belong to my desires, and I like to stay under the illusion that my desires are unique.

Find someone ugly then

Ideally yes, and I've tried, but I like you, and I hate that you are beautiful

You hate that I am beautiful? Great

See

What

Negative – I'm telling you that I see you as beautiful and that you are generically beautiful, and you manage to turn it into something far less than positive

Because you said that you wished I wasn't beautiful

I, well, I didn't mean that in that way.

I don't care anyway, I'm not sure if I meant any of it last night. I have this suspicion I was acting under a false pretense...

In what way?

In the way that I thought I wanted something but I'm not sure I did. Attraction can be intermittent don't you think?

No.....yes I guess...I'm trying to think of an example

Now.... here is your example – I don't particularly find you attractive today, but the chances are that I'll find you irresistible sometime in the future – this afternoon perhaps..

Really? Last night you said that I was glowing, radiant were your words

And you were

Not now?

No, not this morning

I hate that

Me too –